COPYRIGHT PERMISSIONS AND CONSENT FROM IMAGE SUBJECTS

Authors should be aware of any cultural sensitivities or restrictions associated with any images included in their videos. Appropriate ethical guidelines should be adhered to by considering the views and approval processes of the affected subjects and communities.

If any image has been obtained from communities where additional permissions are required, or from a protected source (e.g. museum collections), then authors must obtain the required permissions for use prior to submission of the manuscript.

Content which can reveal the identity of study participants or study subjects can only be included if they (or parents/guardians if they are underage or considered unable to provide informed consent, or their next of kin if participants are deceased) have provided consent to publish.

Any images or figures which have been obtained from another published source, can only be re-used if authors have obtained the appropriate permissions for re-use from the copyright owner. The original source of the image must be cited, even in cases where the image is not under copyright, or if re-use is allowed under a license which permits unrestricted re-use. Authors should include a statement to confirm that all necessary permissions have been obtained.

Videos are not peer-reviewed.
